Using the Hey Kahani brand guidelines

This guide outlines our brand identity standards to ensure we are presented consistently across all communications.

Inside you'll find guidelines on proper use of our logo, colour palette, typography, imagery, and other brand assets.

By following these standards, you'll help us maintain a polished, professional brand image. Our goal is to equip you with the knowledge and resources to produce on-brand materials that reflect our unique qualities.

For any additional brand guidelines information or to request our brand assets, please reach out to hi@heykahani.com

Who we are

Stories that feel like home.

Hey Kahani was born out of a longing - a desire to keep South Asian storytelling alive for children growing up far from home. It began as a simple idea: what if there was a way for kids in the diaspora to hear the stories their parents grew up with - not through screens, but through sound?

At its heart, Hey Kahani is a cultural bridge - a screen-free, audio-first storytelling experience designed for children aged 3–12 and their families. Combining a beautifully designed NFC speaker, a growing library of culturally rooted audiobooks, and a parent-friendly digital platform, it offers both ease and magic.

But more than the product, the purpose defines us.

We exist to:

- Celebrate South Asian heritage in a modern, joyful way
- Foster independent, imaginative play in children
- Help parents instill a sense of pride, focus, and belonging
- Create a global storytelling platform powered by diaspora voices

Where competitors lean on Disney and Western narratives, Hey Kahani is original, intentional, and authentically South Asian - without being overly regional or inaccessible. We partner with writers, musicians, and illustrators across India and the diaspora to bring rich, layered stories into the homes of families worldwide.

Hey Kahani isn’t just a product. It’s a way to help children feel seen, to connect families across generations, and to create a new tradition — one that begins not with a screen, but with a story.

Our mission

This is our company's mission we are dedicated to - the reason we get out of bed in the morning.

This mission will guide us on internal/ external communications, decision-making, and our roadmap. It ensures we're all aligned and moving towards the same goals, keeping our brand consistent and our work meaningful.

To nurture identity, imagination, and independent play through stories that feel like home - wherever in the world you are.

Our customers

An overview of our target audience and their key characteristics.

Understanding our customers helps ensure that all brand communications resonate with their needs, preferences, and behaviours.

Who do we help?

- South Asian diaspora parents (ages 30–45) raising kids in the U.S., Canada, UK, Australia, and beyond
- Children ages 3–12 who need screen-free, engaging ways to build focus, imagination, and cultural connection
- Families seeking balance: preserving heritage while fitting seamlessly into modern, design-conscious homes
- Creators and storytellers from India and the diaspora, who get a platform to share authentic cultural stories

Why choose us?

- Authenticity: Stories crafted by South Asian writers & voiced by cultural narrators — not westernized adaptations
- Screen-Free & Safe: NFC-enabled device gives kids independence, no ads, no distractions
- Premium Experience: Simple, child-first design paired with Bose/Apple-like quality parents admire
- Cultural Pride: Builds identity and confidence by connecting children with their roots
- Value for Families: Lower cost over time vs. Yoto/Tonies, plus unique cultural relevance

Identity on a page

Our mission is to make cultural storytelling simple, joyful, and inspiring for every family.

We design a brand that balances playfulness for children with sophistication for parents, ensuring that our communication is always warm, intuitive, and rooted in cultural pride

We bring the magic of India's storytelling heritage into diaspora homes — through stories that feel like home, told in voices children will remember.

We help parents preserve culture effortlessly while giving kids the joy of screen-free, independent play.

How we speak

In practice, supporting and motivating our audience means always answering the unspoken question: “What would I like to hear if I were the parent in this situation?”

The answer usually is: reassurance, excitement, and genuine care. By consistently providing those through our tone, we form an emotional connection with users that goes beyond just selling a product.

Empathy in Messaging

We weave empathy into our copy to show we understand the user’s perspective. For instance, a marketing message might say, “We know finding quality screen-free activities can be hard – that’s why we created Hey Kahani.” A sentence like this immediately tells parents we see their problem and we care.

Helpful and Guiding Tone

We adopt an instructive yet caring tone to guide users, especially in support content or how-tos. For example, in a FAQ a matter-of-fact style might be too dry, so we keep instructions helpful but human: “Having trouble syncing a story? We’re here to help. Try these quick steps…”. This guidance builds users’ confidence in using the product and shows that we’re on their side.

Motivational and Positive Language

The tone always leans towards positive framing. Rather than highlighting negatives (e.g. “Too much screen time is harmful”), we highlight positives (“Your child can gain so much through imaginative audio play!”). We congratulate and thank users in our content to make them feel good about their choices. Small prompts in the app like “Great choice!” when a parent selects a story, or emails that say “You’re building a beautiful habit of daily storytelling” can reinforce their motivation.

Emotionally Resonant Storytelling

Even outside of the product’s actual stories, our brand communications should use elements of storytelling to engage emotions. For instance, a blog post might open with a relatable anecdote about a child asking a grandparent for a story. By setting a scene or sharing a short narrative, we tap into the nostalgic and emotive aspect. This aligns with our mission to “build trust, nostalgia, and engagement” through an emotive, playful experience.

Photography

Hey Kahani imagery should feel warm, natural, and modern, reflecting the everyday lives of South Asian diaspora families. Photography should capture children (ages 3–12) and parents in authentic, playful moments — listening to stories, handling NFC cards, or enjoying cozy family settings. The tone is homely yet aspirational, with warm natural light, soft textures, and minimal clutter. Interiors can lean toward IKEA-style simplicity with subtle cultural cues — a diya, marigold garland, or mango leaf adding heritage without overwhelming the modern aesthetic.

DO NOT

- Don’t use cliché or stereotypical “Indian culture” imagery (e.g., Taj Mahal, Bollywood tropes, garish costumes).
- Don’t rely on harsh lighting, artificial colors, or over-saturated tones — keep it warm and natural.
- Don’t feature screens (mobiles, tablets) as part of core storytelling — the brand is proudly screen-free.
- Don’t use overly staged stock images; authenticity and gentle imperfections make the imagery relatable.
